Canada in English Markets

The British cooperative wholesale societies do a yearly business of $60-600,000.

Canadian authorities claim that in 1898 Canada supplied 14 per cent. of the total food importations of Great Britain.

The Canadian cheese trade has been one of steady growth. The value of the exportations to Great Britain in 1898 was only $548,574; last year it was $17-522,681.

The value of the total exports from Great Britain to the United States in 1898 was $138,677,538, a loss of 7.2 per cent. in five years; the value of the exports to Canada in 1898 was $28,372,680, a gain of 5.1 per cent. in five years.

The value of the total imports into Great Britain from the United States in 1898 was $615,662,078, a gain of 28.8 per cent. in five years; the value of Canadian imports in 1898 was $29,161-544, a gain of 38.7 per cent. in five years.

An American doing business in Liverpool shipping hides of American cattle slaughtered in Liverpool says he is doing a big trade in sending these hides to Canada to be tanned, the leather being brought back to England. Within six months he shipped in this way 20-000 hides. He says that they can be shipped from Liverpool to Montreal cheaper than they could be carried by rail from Chicago to Montreal.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE.

The average annual cost per pupil for salaries in the Chicago high schools is $53.56.

Westminster college has been established by Presbyterians as a part of Cambridge university.

Nature study at the zoological gardens is to be a part of the course of instruction in Philadelphia public schools.

The alumni of Tufts college have obtained a voice in the government of the college in the form of a board of overseers.

Car fare is not needed by school children in Victoria, Australia. They are carried in street cars to and from school free of charge.

er, is most primitive and the wonder is how such an immense population can be supported from the soil, until the great economy practiced in all things is understood.

On the Great Plain of China, every available foot of land is utilized for growing something and every particle of fertility returned to the soil. Waters are used for irrigation and in many cases laboriously distributed over the fields.

The Great Plain itself is one of the most wonderful sections of the globe. It is about 700 miles long and varies from 200 to 400 miles wide, occupying the northeastern part of the empire, and containing over two hundred thousand square miles of wonderfully fertile soil.

The most interesting feature of the plain is its enormous population as it supports, according to the census of 1812 not less than 777 million human beings, making the most densely settled part of the world, of its size, its inhabitants amounting to nearly two thirds of the entire population of Europe.

FAMOUS PEOPLE'S EYES.

The duke of Wellington had, it is said, blue hawk's eyes gleaming with military genius.

Audubon, as became a naturalist, had "hawklike eyes that flashed like a searchlight and were ever on the alert for each movement of animated nature."

Charles Lamb is described as having glittering eyes, strangely dissimilar in color, one being hazel, the other having specks of gray in the iris, as you see red spots in the bloodstone.

According to Trelawney no man had brighter eyes than Byron: they were gray and fringed with long black lashes.

Lady Blessington, writing of him a few months before his departure to Greece, adds that one eye was visibly larger than the other.

The most striking feature of Burns was his large dark eye. It was, we are told by one writer, "full of mind and literally glowed when he spoke with emotion or interest."

Sir W. Scott, who knew the poet when he lived in Edinburgh, says: "I never saw such an other eye in a human head, and I have seen the most distinguished men of my time."

Eyes, as we know, are apt to vary considerably in shades of color in the same individual from time to time—a fact that explains why Wordsworth's familiar description of Coleridge as a noticeable man with large gray eyes does not quite agree with Carlyle's impression that his eyes were of a light hazel, nor this again with the writer who found them "light gray, prominent and of liquid brilliancy, though the orb itself retreated to the innermost recesses of the brain."

Chatterton's brilliant gray eyes were his most remarkable feature. Under strong excitement one appeared brighter, and, as in the case of Byron, larger than the other. Calcutt says: "It was like the eye of a hawk, and one could see his soul through it." Barrett "never saw such eyes, fire rolling at the bottom of them," and he confesses that he often purposely differed in opinion from Chatterton to see how wonderfully his eye would strike fire, kindle and blaze up.
